It's 2003. Three years earlier Trebor Maple, 70, set pro golf on its ear by winning the first Senior (now Champions) Tour event he entered, then taking the lead the next week only to walk off the course and quit tournament golf.

The media that was in love with Treb quickly forgot him, except to acknowledge that he had moved to Las Vegas, if anyone out there really cared. To make a living for him, his invalid wife and two long-time associates, he reportedly had returned to deadbeat courses to teach high-handicap older golfers by day, and by night played a strong game of mid-stakes Texas Hold-em poker. An unusual lifestyle for a born-again Christian, no one in the media seemed to notice.

Why? a West Texas newspaper published wanted to know. Especially since Mable had mysterious yet strong ties to late-1950s rock 'n' roll. So he sends his favorite features writer, Brad Poole, 40, and his beautiful new girlfriend, Amanda, 25, to Vegas to sniff out the real stories. Even if he's taking a chance due to Brad's onetime poker addiction.

What they find is much more than anyone expected. For starters, murderous drug dealers with an indirect connection to Amanda.
