True 'innovativeness' doesn't happen by following a predetermined algorithm, ultimate business process, or magic pill prescribed by the innovation wizard of the week. Since 1976, these two authors have studied over 1,500 successful and failed innovation initiatives. From this study comes 35 guiding principles, grouped together with seven five-letter acronyms, a letter for each principle. In Feeling Competitive, you will learn:

- To develop a purposeful and deep relationship with markets using the acronym DANCE.
- Why initiatives fail to drive change using the acronym FORCE.
- To effectively transition market opportunities into business opportunities using the acronym ALIGN.
- The secret of gaining customer satisfaction from initiatives using the acronym VALUE.
- Hard-hitting practices driving the pace of your innovation initiatives using the acronym POWER.
- Tangible activities that will maximize market excitement levels using the acronym MODEL.
- Real-world launch methods that increase a firm's competitiveness using the acronym MEANS.

These guiding principles are illustrated through a warm and compelling story line in a way you're not likely to forget soon.
