Not illustrated. 1858 Excerpt: ...to be put forward to read our interesting and solemn services upon installation, dedication, funeral or other ceremonial occasion. We have seen, (we hope for the last time), such farces acted before the public. Masons and the world have at last been brought to acknowledge that there is a masonic literature, and he who would be a grand master should have drunk deep at its fountain. He should be acquainted with her history, her antiquities, her philosophy, her constitution and her laws, and sufficiently understand her ritual to look through our ceremonies, which are only shadows to the substance which reflects them. Tho multitude, who either cannot or will not see the substance, but are led away with the shadow, will never become more than (what the fraternity have long regarded them) parrotmasons; they may be learned to talk, but never to think. The subject is far from being exhausted, but we must hasten to name a negative qualification. The mason should be a Jackson-man, never to seek, or decline the office of grand master, or, indeed, any other. "We almost fear being laughed at for naming this; but that grand master Evans of New York, a man of enlarged experience and observation, tells us (look back at our quotation from his address), in confirmation of what we have seen, that such things unfortunately do sometimes occur, even among masons. Truth, that divine attribute, which we profess and seek to practice, requires us, while we say we have seen such things, to go farther, and add we have always seen, as we always hope to see, them fail. Such practices should ever recoil upon the heads of all who "stoop to conquer." Brother Teas, of "Washington I--I, No 26, moved that the report be printed with the proceedings. Carried. On motion of bro...
